RIO DE JANEIRO, NOVEMBER 4th, 1889.

THERE was a little tempest stirred up in our South American tea-pot on the 29th ult, at Montevideo in the shape of a controversy between the Brazilian minister and Uruguayan naval commander over the hoisting of a Brazilian flag on a steamer employed to convey the President and his suite to Colonia. The steamer, the Camillo, is Brazilian, but was chartered by the Uruguayan government for an official excursion, on which the Brazilian minister was an invited guest. It was proper therefore that the Uruguayan flag should be hoisted; in fact, it is difficult to imagine a case where the executive of a country would not have insisted, as his right, that his official character and the dignity of his government should not be so recognized. Some supersensitive members of the Brazilian colony in Montevideo thought different, however; so they telegraphed to the Brazilian minister, Sr. Ponte Ribeiro, at Colonia protesting against flying the Uruguayan flag on the Camillo, and this gentleman, forgetting the courtesy due to the executive of the country to which he is accredited ordered the Brazilian flag to be hoisted on the return trip. The Uruguayan naval commander, Bernardo Depuy, opposed this and ordered the hoisting of the Uruguayan flag. The two excited gentlemen thereupon quarreled. and Ponte Ribeiro went so far as to demand Depuy's dismissal from President Tajes. The President naturally requested time to consider, but the Brazilian minister would not accede, whereupon another wordy warfare ensued. President Tajes then signalled for one of the gunboats convoying the party, to which he transferred himself and suite, leaving the irate Brazilian diplomat on his own vessel. As the last boat left the Camillo the Uruguayan flag was pulled down and the Brazilian hoisted, an act which certainly exhibited a most decided lack of good taste and courtesy. Subsequent telegrams advise us that the controversy has been amicably settled, but there is one point that never can be settled-the blunder made by Sr. Ponte Ribeiro. He was a guest on an official excursion of the Uruguayan government to be present at the inauguration of an Uruguayan railway. It was entirely proper that the Uruguayan flag should cover this party, and it was improper for Sr. Ponte Ribeiro to give contrary orders. He then quarreled with his entertainers, drove them off the boat, and hauled down their flag as they were leaving. The least that Brazil can now do is to order Sr. Ponte Ribeiro home.

THE continued discussion of the question of permitting more than one bank to issue notes leads to the conclusion that the friends of restriction propose to ignore the law altogether, while the advocates of the system outlined in the law are either quite as indifferent to its mandatory provisions, or are doubtful of their ability to enforce it against the powerful combination working in the have before stated, it is not a flattering commentary on the sanctity of the law in this country, where every one seems to take it for granted that any law can be set aside at the mere caprice of a minister. If the law has any force and if there is any court, or authority, to confine the action of the government within statutory limits, then there is no way to prevent other banks from exercising the same privilege accorded to the Banco Nacional. Legally, that bank can not issue more than 60,000,000$, and as the maximum limit fixed for this city is 300, 000,000$, with coin in reserve, the government must accord the privilege to other institutions. In our opinion, the discussion now waging in the daily papers is not only useless, but it is on the whole based on fragmentary information and wrong conclusions. In the United States the withdrawal of currency from circulation is not due to a tendency to concentrate the issue to a few banks, as has been stated in the discussion, but is entirely due to the unprofitableness of the business. The taxes imposed on the banks make the issue of currency profitable only when money is in demand and interest rates are good; per contra, the issue leaves no satisfactory profit and the bank calls it in. This is a feature in the national banking system to which we have frequently called attention, but with so little effect that the shrinkage in circulation, due to definite and proper causes, is here so little understood that it is ascribed to another and radically different cause Nothing perhaps more clearly shows the absolute inappreciation of the national banking system by Brazilians than this one point. They can understand one king, one bank, one idea in politics, religion, finance, etc.,centralized system throughout; but when it comes to decentralization—the separation of powers, authority, and obligations - they appear to find it impossible to adjust themselves to the new system. As events are now tending in Brazil, this decentralization is most necessary, and nowhere will it have a more beneficial influence than in the organization of a large number of banks, all equal before the law and all enjoying the same favors from the state and the people. It will be a serious mistake to restrict this tendency in the slightest degree.

- Life appears to be anything but a pleasure in the interior of Bahia. The people are still suffer ing from drouth, added to which are epidemics of fever and small-pox, A correspondent of the Diario de Noticias of Bahia writes: "If we escape the fever, we are not withdrawn from starvation and if we flee from starvation, we are not avoiding the violent attack of small pox." If the editor happens to be out collecting a subscription when they call, they are hereby requested to sit down and make themselves at home, but not to meddle with the type nor the scissors, and to keep their fingers out of the paste-pot.

-On the 23rd ult. the president of the council and the minister of agriculture visited the iron rolling mills at Porto das Neves, on the other side of the bay. The whole process was examined and -of course-the product is equal to the very best foreign iron. Where the raw material came from is not very clear, but from a remark made by the premier, we infer it is not native. A lunch was duly served and prosperity to every body present heartily desired.

MARKET REPORT.

Rio de Janeiro, 4th November, 1889. Exports.

Coffee,—The state of our market has not changed in any particular since our last report. In anticipation of the prospective large crop of next year, the present estimates of which have been so fravorable, foreign buyers have withdrawn from the market at current rates and are insisting on considerable reductions. Local holders, however, knowing the limited quantity available for the current year, are inclined to resist every reduction, and the result is a partial suspension of their were reduction, and the result is a partial suspension of busi-ness. Some slight concessions have been made, and it is robable that still others may be realized shortly, but it is not to be expected that prices will be reduced to any considerable
